Predictive Services Discussion: The strong upper low over the Four Corners will begin to slowly move east-northeast today. In its wake, an upper high pressure will build over the West Coast. This will result in relatively weak onshore flow across the West Coast with generally lighter winds and higher relative humidity along coast. As the upper high pressure strengthens, conditions will become increasingly hot and dry, although dense and widespread smoke across portions of the West Coast will impact surface temperatures. Thunderstorms and rain will remain likely across portions of the southern and central Rockies and southern and central Plains and across much of the East Coast ahead of an approaching cold front.

Suicide Prevention Day

Firefighter Health/First Aid

It is fair to say that since the recognition of COVID-19 in March, our workforce has been in a Planning Level (PL5) level of reaction. We have been forced to adapt rapidly with ever-changing policies. This alone has created a stressful environment for many, and if you are feeling this way, you are not alone.

Our work as firefighters is not limited to wildfires any longer but has expanded to all risk, which brings even more exposure to stressful situations. Hurricanes, longer assignments, busier seasons, devastating fires...sound familiar? More time away from home and experiencing more stress can take its toll.

Learning to recognize the indicators that you or someone on your crew/unit/team needs additional support can be the difference that saves a life.

The mental health continuum can be used as a tool to help build resiliency, allowing for recovery from stressful events and reducing the chance of suicide.

ACTION:

1 – YOU: Assess where you are currently on the spectrum.

2 – As a CREW: Have each person on the crew write down three signs they exhibit when they are stressed as well as several things they enjoy doing to relieve stress.

Talking about stress can bring a crew/unit/team closer together, but it's not always easy to do. Consider discussing these questions to chat about stress and how to manage stress:

- How do you exhibit stress?
- Do co-workers have insights on how you exhibit stress?
- What stress-relief activities and strategies do you share with your co-workers?
