Predictive Services Discussion: Warm and relatively dry conditions will continue across the eastern half of Alaska, with isolated to scattered thunderstorms likely as well. Cooler temperatures, higher humidity, and showers should also continue across western Alaska. Another day of dry and breezy conditions are expected across central and southern portions of the Great Basin, while monsoon thunderstorms remain likely across eastern Arizona, eastern Utah, New Mexico, and Colorado. Isolated thunderstorms are forecast across portions of the Inland Pacific Northwest, with greater chances and coverage of thunderstorms, including strong to severe storms, across northern and central Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, and into the Dakotas. Strong to severe thunderstorms are possible across the central Plains, while strong to severe thunderstorms are more likely from the Midwest through the MidAtlantic and central to southern Appalachians. Hot and dry conditions are expected across the southern Plains, including most of Texas, into the Ozarks.

Today's topic is dedicated to all wildland firefighters.

May we never stop learning.

Today we mark the anniversary of the South Canyon Fire which claimed the lives of 14 wildland firefighters. This tribute to the incident on Storm King Mountain closes out a week of collective remembrance and learning, honoring the lives lost to wildland fire. Anniversaries such as this provide an opportunity for all of us to reflect on our mission and seek improvement. Participating in the Week of Remembrance, it becomes clear how tightly wound learning and tragedy are. As a result of these events, countless lessons can be learned and passed along through our leaders, teachers, mentors, and conversations with each other.
This is our history. Learn from it today. Use it tomorrow.
The Week of Remembrance is a somber time for all of us. Taking this week to discuss lessons of loss should encourage us to reflect. What we do with that reflection is how we honor the memories of those we have lost.

The purpose of this week has been to honor all fallen firefighters by making a commitment to learn the lessons from those that walked the fireline before us. Many lessons are learned the hard way ending in the ultimate sacrifice.

Student of Fire - This notion was coined by the late Paul Gleason, developer of LCES. When "We as firefighters can most honor them by recognizing and cherishing the lessons they have imparted to us at the greatest price."

- Paul Gleason asked what he wanted his legacy to be, Paul responded, "I suppose I would want my legacy to be that firefighters begin to realize the importance of being a student of fire, and that I was able to help make that happen." Being a student of fire means different things to different people.
"Ultimately, a student of fire is first and foremost a student. A student is always learning. A student never assumes they have it all figured out. A student looks for the lesson. A student is willing to question their own beliefs. This is humility." - Learning in the Wildland Fire Service

Ask yourself: Are you a student of fire?
Action: We encourage everyone - fireline personnel, incident management teams, fire support staff, or program managers - to take a moment of remembrance today when appropriate to:

- Reflect on the 6MFS Week of Remembrance topics.
- Discuss lessons learned from this Week of Remembrance.
- Consider how you will apply those lessons.

In memory of the firefighters lost on the incidents studied during the 2022 Week of Remembrance and to all whose ultimate sacrifice has given us the opportunity to learn.
