Predictive Services Discussion: Another weak Pacific cold front will move through the Inland Pacific Northwest into the northern Great Basin and northern Rockies today. Ahead of the front, temperatures will remain well above normal across the West, mostly in the 90s to 110°F, and minimum relative humidity generally below 15%. Elevated to critical fire weather conditions are expected across northern Montana and in portions of southeast Idaho into Wyoming as west-northwest sustained winds of 15-20 mph gusting 25-40 mph amid minimum relative humidity of 7-15% develop. Hot and dry conditions are likely on much of the northern Plains and the central High Plains as well. Isolated mixed wet and dry thunderstorms are possible in the Transverse Ranges and southern Sierra of southern California and in portions of southern Colorado, northern New Mexico, and northeast Arizona. Scattered thunderstorms and showers are expected from south Texas through much of the eastern US except in New England. Heavy rain is possible from the Ohio Valley into the southern and central Appalachians.

Ash Pit Hazards

Miscellaneous Fireline Hazards Category

Ash pits are an inherent and hidden risk to wildland firefighters that can cause severe burns and injuries. Ash pits are created when a ground fire consumes underground fuels creating an empty space that is imperceptible from the surface.

Environmental factors that increase the risk of ash pit formation after a wildfire:

- Extensive root systems of trees and shrubs.
- Deep duff or peat, which is the organic layer covering mineral soil.
- Landscapes that have once been cultivated or manipulated by heavy equipment, old dozer piles, sawmills, timber sale yards, or decking areas.
- Animal dwellings that have become filled with decadent combustible debris.
 - Small rodent holes,
 - Beaver holes near dams and stream beds, or
 - Badger and coyote dens.
- White ash is sometimes an indicator of ash pits, as are swarms of hovering insects.
- With the sun behind the suspected ash pit, look for small nearly translucent smokes that dissipate quickly above the ground.
- Ash pits often give off the smell of incomplete combustion or of creosote burning.

Mitigation measures to consider:

- Identification of high-risk landscape.
- Identify and flag all hazardous discovered ash pits.
