Predictive Services Discussion: Above normal temperatures in the 80s and 90s will spread across much of the West under upper ridging as a low-level thermal trough moves into the Great Basin and Inland Northwest. Relative humidity is likely to remain low at 6-20\% across the northern Intermountain West and spread near and east of the Divide from central Montana south through Wyoming into northern Colorado. Unstable conditions are likely in the vicinity of the thermal trough with fires likely to be active, but smoke may limit the amount of heating and instability. West winds of 10-20 mph with gusts 20-30 mph are possible along and east of the Divide in Montana for elevated conditions, especially in areas that did not receive rainfall late last week. Isolated to scattered mainly wet thunderstorms are likely across the southern California mountains into the central and southern Sierra, then east through the southern Great Basin and across the greater Four Corners area. A few isolated mixed wet and dry thunderstorms may develop across the northern Sierra into the southern Oregon Cascades. Gulf of Mexico moisture will continue to stream northward with scattered to numerous showers and thunderstorms from the Southeast to the Great Lakes and Mid-Atlantic, with the heaviest rain likely in the vicinity of Lake Michigan.

LE D Time  Bias for Action  Leadership Category

Leaders in the wildland fire service are not only empowered but also duty-bound to act on a situation that is within their power to affect, even without direction from above.
This empowerment is not intended to encourage freelancing. In a high-risk environment, freelancing is a dangerous and unpredictable element, causing more harm than good. Ultimately, leaders are always accountable for their actions.

- A bias for action acknowledges wildfire as an environment where events do not always go according to plan.
- At times during an incident, one person may be the only individual to see what needs to be done and to make it happen.
- Time may not permit gathering all of the information that one might like to have; if you wait until you have all the facts to be $100 \%$ sure of your decision, it will almost always be too late.
In these time-critical situations, fire leaders use judgment, act within the intent of their leaders, work in unison with others, develop and communicate a plan, then inform superiors of actions as soon as safely possible.

On a chaotic and rapidly developing wildfire, one person taking the initiative can make all the difference in taking advantage of an opportunity. Being hesitant, risk-averse, or indecisive can expose firefighters to greater long-term risks and translate into a waste of time, opportunity, energy, and money.

Discussion Points

- Discuss the difference between freelancing and a bias for action.
- Describe and discuss instances of taking appropriate action and of indecisiveness or nonaction.
- What are some ways we train for situations requiring a bias for action?
